ABSTRACT

Cicer arietinum L.) is one of the important legume rabi season crop in production among the world pulse crops. The aim of the study was to identify quantitative trait loci (QTLs) linked to seed yield and yield related traits in a recombinant inbred lines (RIL) derived from the cross of Pisarium wilt susceptible (JG62) and resistant (WR315). The population consisting of 125 RILs was grown under field condition over two seasons. The population were genotyped with sixty polymorphic markers and phenotyped for agronomic and yield related traits. A genetic map composed of two linkage groups (LGs) covering 768.92 cM was constructed. QTL analysis was performed by composite interval mapping (CIM) using ICIM QTL Mapping version 4.00 software. Total five QTLs were identified for productivity related traits with a LOD score from 3.18 to 11.42. One QTL (qPods 13-2-1) for number of pods per plant explaining a phenotypic variance (PVE) of 11.05% were observed in 2013, four QTLs were identified in 2014, two QTLs (qFlowering 14-1-1 and qFlowering 14-1-2) for days taken to 50% flowering explaining a PVE of 28.07% and 40.10% respectively and two QTLs (qTW 14-1-1 and qTW 14-2-1) for 100 seed weight explaining a PVE of 11.56% and 19.29% respectively. The identified markers could be used in marker assisted selection (MAS) in chickpea breeding programmes after validation.

Introduction

Chickpea (Cicer arietinum L.), is an annual self-pollinated and diploid (2n=16) most important grain legume rabi season crop with genome size of ~738 Mb (Karami et al., 2015). Globally, chickpea is cultivated on 11.55 million hectares with an annual production of 10.46 million tons and average productivity of 905 kg/ha. India is the largest producer of chickpea, accounts for about 70 % of the world chickpea production followed by Australia (6.21 %), Pakistan (5.73 %), Turkey (3.86 %), Myanmar (3.74 %), Iran (2.25 %), USA (0.84 %), Canada (0.78 %), and Mexico (0.62 %) (FAO, 2015).

Chickpea was first cultivated in an area of south-eastern Turkey and adjoining Syria but is now cultivated throughout the semi-arid regions of the world (Knights et al., 2007). In cultivated chickpea, there are two distinct

Abstract

Sustainable Development remains the focus of discussions at all international forums, as world leaders look for ways to find a balance between population growth and economic development on one hand and use of natural resources and ecosystems on the other. The development of innovative and affordable ICT (information and communication technology) has not only offered substitutes for travel and transportation of goods, but also has facilitated fast, cheap, equitable and resource efficient access to information, knowledge and learning opportunities for its users. ICT has enabled people across the globe to cooperate and perform various activities of human life and endeavour. ICT empowers machine which in turn can be used extensively for making a meaningful impact towards sustainability of our environment and economy. This paper is an attempt to investigate, explore and compile examples from across the globe where IT giants have shown empirical proof that incorporation of environmental sustainability is good business sense and in the long run results into economic sustainability for the firm.

Abstract

In today's world where no one is willing to make a compromise when it comes to health, soy food has become a healthy choice around the world. Soybean is a leguminous crop and popularly consumed world wide. This crop is extremely useful for human health and easy to cultivate as well. In comparison to other leguminous crops, the production of soybean is double then other crops and hence this crop is very effective in feeding worlds growing population. The protein content is 40 per cent which double then other pulses. Soy products contain all the essential amino acids and make it an ideal protein source for vegetarians. The variety of soy products has created a massive new market altogether. Health benefits of soybeans come from the nutrients, vitamins, and organic compounds. Besides protein soybean contains significant amount of dietary fiber, vitamins, minerals, and antioxidants, which further help in boosting healthy living. These nutrients leads to many health benefits like improve metabolic activity, prevent cancer, keeps heart healthy, improves digestion, improve bone health, prevent birth defects, improve blood circulation, control diabetes, etc. Soybeans have a high vitamin and mineral content and the impressive levels of calcium, magnesium, copper, selenium, and zinc are very important for a variety of processes in the body, most importantly for bones. The high levels of vitamin B complex and folic acid in soybeans are very beneficial to pregnant women. Folic acid ensures the prevention of neural tube defects in infants, which ensures a happy and healthy baby. Soya products contain phytoestrogens "isoflavones". The isoflavones (daidzein and genistein) have attracted a great deal of research and some studies suggest that women with a soya-rich diet may have a lower risk of breast cancer. Enlightening the importance of soybean present study suggested increasing the production of soybean which will save our health treasure.
