A COMPARATIVE STUDY OF USING FLY ASH AND MARBLE POWDER FOR FLUORIDE TREATMENT

Ranjeeta Soni

Research Scholar, Department of Physical Science, Jagannath University Chaksu, Jaipur, Rajasthan, India

ABSTRACT

Fluoride is excessively available in groundwater is very common in India. To knowing the adverse effects of fluoride in water many adsorbents using time to time but due to many side effects of defluoridation we need a perfect method for this. In this research work, we have been applied a comparative study of two different cheap adsorbent. The using adsorbents are Fly ash and marble powder. Here used fly ash, generated from Chula. And pieces of marble collected from the construction area and crushed for use in the laboratory. In this research work Ash, Marble powder is mixed with fluoridated water. After the analysis, we found both of the adsorbents removes fluoride from drinking water but the results were found from fly ash is better than from marble powder.

INTRODUCTION

Various Health Impacts of Fluoride

Fluoride is a positively charged ion like calcium (Ca⁺⁺). It is important for our bones and teeth but having the highest amount of calcium in the body attracts the maximum amount of fluoride. It is deposited in the form of Calcium Fluorapatite crystals in the body. Excess of fluoride above 1.5 mg/L may cause to serious manifestations, which are described below:-

- Dental Fluorosis: Problems related to teeth.
- Skeletal Fluorosis: Problem-related bones of hands, legs, and joints.
- Non-Skeletal Fluorosis: Excessive fluoride can cause several other problems and disorder like neurological, muscular, allergic, gastro-intestinal and urinary disorders.
